she could find; sent to the king himself; received by the king's trusted official; guarded, as was to be supposed, every moment of the time since it had left her hands—none the less, the coin had disappeared as though some spectre hand had abstracted it.

The blank look of surprise which came to her face was something not to be mistaken. King Michael frowfied "What is this, mademoiselle-are we made the subject of some sport? How

Count Frederick himself, who stood near by, was quite as much surprised as Kitty at the denouement of this little play which had been devised by her. Had his own man then lied to him-had he also been made the subfect of some jest? For it may be remembered that he himself had taken means of his own to secure possesmeans of his own to secure possession of the coin before it could reach the hands of the king.

Kitty stood regarding first one, then the next of the faces about her. On the countenance of Count Frederick she read only chagrin and surprise equal to her own. There was no trace of guilty knowledge there—she was sure of that. Whatever had been his own plans in regard to the clusive bit of metal, surely his desires had been thwarted now as fully as her own. Then another hand had come into the game! Some other mind also was interested in the mysterious coin of Gretshoffen. Yet other machinations were to be added to those, so obvious, of the drama of the coin and its rapidly changing ownership.

"What then, mademoiselle?" demanded Michael, hymself not yet so fully advided as others regarding the nature of this packet which had been intended for him. "What was it that you were so good as to intend sending us?"

Kitty dared not answer the direct question. She concluded quickly that it would be far safer to add as little as possible to the number of those who knew the full story of the travel-who knew the full story of the traveling coin.

"Your Majesty," said she, turning upon him so dazzling a smile as would have made any man forget all else. "It was nothing! It was but a small favor I would have sent Your Majesty, to show the acknowledgment of my own country, since Your Majesty has done such honor to me to-night. Perhaps some one in my humble menage has been unfaithful-if so, it was but small loss after all. If Your Majesty will forget it and give me a few added days of grace, I will explain—I will try again, I hope with greater fortune."

Michael was ready enough to agree

CHAPTER XVIII.

In full view of the spectators, who now had left the dancing floor and gathered in groups at a respectful distance from royalty, Kitty received the envelope from the messenger—the same packet which she had herself sent to the palace that morning for delivery at midnight.

She did this with a fine air of insoucience, for she felt quite sure that success now had met all her plans; nor did the outward appearange of the packet afford any reason to suspect otherwise.

Yet, even as she took the envelope in her hand, there came to her a sharp conviction that something was wrong. It had a strange lightness—it did not seem quite the same as when she herself had sealed it that morning. Hastily, she opened the envelope, her lips compressed. It was empty!

Yes, the mysterious coin was gone. Entrusted to the safest messenger she could find; sent to the king himself; received by the king's trusted.

As they swept on in the evolutions of the dance, Kitty caught sight of the dark face of Count Sachio. He himself was not dancing, but stood aloof, at the edge of the space occupled by the dancers. His eyes were fixed upon her with an expression which she could not fathom.

"DOLLARS and SENSE" By H. J. Barrett.

This Solicitor Found Old Man Hoskins's Vulnerable Spot.

"It's no use seeing old Hoskins," remarked Braman of the Braman Advertising Agency to his new partner, Stanton, a recent arrival in the city. "He's an opinionated old ass, and because back in Millard Fillmore's administration he once worked on a newspaper he thinks his own copy is beyond criticism. His 'ads.' are the joke of the city. But if you go in and as much as hint that they can be improved upon he's likely to call you a conceited young whipper-snapper. Too bad; that account is worth three or four thousand a year to some agency," and Braman frowned as he recalled numerous fruitless attempts to make Hoskins of Hoskins's Brush Company see the light.

Company see the light.

"A case of diplomatic handling," remarked Stanton. "I suppose he's pretty touchy on the subject now. Probably every agency in town has taken a shot at him."

"Yes, it's like waving a red flag at a bull even to say the word advertising to him. The feeble stuff-he runs brings him no business. He advertises merely for the pleasure of seeing his name in print. Now this man Elwood, on the other hand," and Braman continued his conversation with the idea of posting the new man on the idea of posting the new man on local conditions.

"Good morning, Mr. Hoskins." The scene was Hoskins's office several days later. "Stanton is my name. I'm a new arrival here and I understand that you were recognized as one of the best posted men on advertising in this community. I've come to ask a great favor of you. I want your advice regarding the proper handling of an account I've just obtained. As a stranger I'm not thoroughly posted on media, local buying habits, &c. Five minutes of your time may save me thousands of dollars, and, seating himself in the chair Hoskins offered him, the caller was soon deep in discussion of the prop and cons of the proper method of handling one of his agency's new accounts. Proofs of prospective "ads." soon covered Hoskins's desk; shortly the old man was laying out a dummy. If this were fiction instead of fact Stanton would have left the office with Hoskins's business. But it required several calls, covering a two office with Hoskins's business. But it required several calls, covering a two months' period, to bring about this happy culmination.

Finally one day Hoskins, who had taken quite a fancy to this modest young man who was so quick and ready to accept his suggestions, re-

"I've been thinking it over, Mr. Stanton, and I've concluded that I simply haven't time to give my advertising the attention it requires. I'm going to turn it over to your agency. Your staff can develop my ideas; it won't cost me any more and you can pecket the commissions from the magazines." "And the best strong-arm men in the business have fallen down with Hoskins!" ejaculated Braman when he heard the news. "Stanton, you're all right. You must have hypnotized

"No, merely flattered him," replied Stanton. "If not overdone, it pays. It's not the first time I've used that method. You can sell merchandise that way just as well as professional
